About your course

Developing skills in teaching and learning is an important part of modern healthcare. We firmly believe in the importance of education and the sharing of expertise and experience.

About the workshop

Teaching and learning are embedded in professional codes of conduct and healthcare professionals are required to support students and colleagues, to help them develop their professional competence and confidence. Many clinicians provide in house training or transfer specialist knowledge and expertise within the workplace.

This course will equip participants with the skills required to promote active and meaningful learning. It will create a platform to share knowledge and experience, ensuring education changes practice, which ultimately influences the provision of safe and effective care.

This interactive two-day training programme is aimed at registered healthcare practitioners, from a variety of professional backgrounds who want to develop confidence in teaching practice. We welcome learners who have a professional registration with a regulator such as the HCPC, NMC or GPhC.

Following the 2-day programme, participants will be able to:

- 1 Demonstrate knowledge on the key approaches to adult learning using innovative teaching practice
- 2 Develop practical teaching skills, including virtual and in person classroom management techniques
- 3 Identify factors that influence learning
- 4 Become a reflective teaching practitioner with a commitment to continuous development
